P. S. Donaldson's abiding faith in one who walks in clerical garb and speaks with a suave tongue was rudely shocked last night, and is, perhaps, destroyed forever. Donaldson lives at 1212 East Clay Street. Last Saturday night a stranger knocked at his gate, and he took him in. The man asked for a night's lodging, representing for a night's lodging, representing himself to be a traveling savior of souls, an Itinerant preacher, who went about doing good, and who was for the time being without where to lay his head and without that which would allay the gnawing pain in the region of his belt.

Lee Camp Hears Addresses on Preservation of Memories of Confederacy.

"If we can't have an accurate history of the War Between the States taught in our schools, then we should abolish the history." This statement was made by Governor Mann, who, by virtue of his office, is a member of the State Board of Education, at a special meeting of R. E. Lee Camp, No. 1. United Sons of Confederate Veterans, heid last night in the Business Men's United Sons of Confederate Veterans, held last night in the Business Men's Club. He said that a duty of the Sons of Veterans should be to compile accurate information concerning the war and events which led up to it.

These remarks were brought about by an address of Nathan Bedford Forrest, of Memphis, Tenn., adjutant-general of the United Sons of Confederate Veterans, and grandson of the famous Confederate cavalry leader. He referred to a plan of the Sons of Securing data, which is now being preserved in the order's headquarters, and which will eventually be passed to the historian for the purpose of preparing an accurate and authentic chronicle of the struggle of the sixties.

No Saitsfactory History.

The total for January and February amounted to $730,964, making the two and one-half months already passed exceed the total of permits for the first quarter of last year. There seems no immediate prospect for a cessation, as plans are pending in the office of Building Inspector Beck aggregating between $60,000 and $70,000.

The bulk of work authorized this year has been in brick dwellings, mainly in the western and southwestern sections, hundreds of houses varying in cost from $2,900 to $10,000 being now in course of crection, while the work now under contract will give employment to thousands of men with the opening of spring weather.
